Alternatively, if you really dislike asking your clients for money and just hope that they'll pay, give us a call at CollectIT 07 934 9111 or email so we can assist with improving your cashflow.

CollectIT is trying to improve the court process around liquidation

In CollectIT's February 2011 newsletter we wrote about a diy subscriber's frustration at the High Court's refusal to allow it, as a company, to file liquidation documents against a debtor. CollectIT's subscriber had no choice but to engage a solicitor, and pay a fee to that solicitor in return for the solicitors name on the documents.

This situation only occurs in the High Court. In the District Court a company is permitted to file documents and appear in court through an appropriate company representative, for example, a company director. CollectIT wrote to the Minister of Justice pointing out the differences between the District and High Court and asking whether there were any plans to change this situation and allow company representatives to file documents and appear in the High Court on a company's behalf.

The Ministry for Courts responded on 7 April 2011 and basically the response was disappointing. Not only are there no plans to change the current situation there is a suggestion that there may be a change in the future to disallow the filing of documents, and appearances in court by a company in the District Court. CollectIT considers that all entities, whether they be individuals, trusts or companies should be allowed to file documents and appear in court. No good reason has been put forward for the distinction between individuals and companies. The current situation in CollectIT's view amounts to a barrier in the High
